“Advancing Community Development” is a unique year-long program which combines academic course work with a field placement overseen by professionals from Johnson & Johnson and non-profit leaders from local community organizations.

FALL SEMESTER

• Take a 3-credit class offered Wednesdays 6:10-7:30pm on Busch Campus co-taught by Rutgers faculty and Johnson & Johnson professionals. Topics include community development, non-profit management, and community-based research.
• Work with a local community partner to develop a capacity-building project for their organization.
• Learn about issues facing the New Brunswick community and how you can make a difference.

SPRING SEMESTER

• Implement a capacity-building project for a local community organization, 6-8 hours per week.
• Take a 2-credit recitation class where you will reflect on your projects and learn from each other.
• Work with a local community partner to develop a capacity-building project for their organization.
• Have an opportunity to present your project at a year-end celebration.
